Oppose

Explanation:

SB 209 proposes to eliminate the statutory bond provisions of the felony non support statute, MCL 750.165. The Family Law Section opposes this change. The felony non-support statute is primarily a child support enforcement tool, and is often used to enforce against out-of-state payers who are beyond the reach of civil bench warrants. People who are delinquent in their child support have little incentive to remain in state without a significant bond, especially because non support is a strict liability offense. The statutory bond operates as much as a performance bond as it does as an appearance bond, and it allows a delinquent payer to be released prior to the arraignment. If the payer can show good cause the court may reduce the bond amount at the arraignment.

The Family Law Section believes that the current statutory provision should be retained, and opposes SB 209.
