Many new lawyers are extremely nervous their first few times in court. As a result, they tend to over-prepare. The downfall to over-preparation is that new lawyers are not prepared for unexpected answers or statements from clients and witnesses. They are completely thrown off if things don't go exactly as anticipated. This visibly shakes confidence.

For this event, an instructor will teach a three hour workshop in two parts. The first half will focus on teamwork, trust and learning to "fail." (I.e. not getting the anticipated ruling.) The second half focuses on a concept that improv actors call "yes, and..." This is an idea based on dealing any response as though it is workable, even if it seems impossible.

Cost

- Workshop$25
Includes three-hour class and one hour of networking with light snacks and cash bar
