Oppose

Explanation:

The Animal Law Section opposes HB 4117, which would amend the Animal Industry Act to delay the prohibition on the use of battery cages for egg-laying hens until January 1, 2029. The process of moving to cage-free egg production requirements in Michigan was a long one, which started with legislation passed in 2009 that provided for a 10-year transition period. In 2019, Republican-led legislation moved the effective date to December 31, 2024, allowing producers another five years to transition to cage-free operations. The elimination of the use of battery cages as a means of housing egg-laying hens was a critical step in reducing extreme suffering for millions of egg-laying hens in Michigan (the seventh largest egg producing state in the country) who were deprived of their ability to engage in natural behaviors, including walking and extending their wings. This long-anticipated improvement in welfare for egg-laying hens, which is already in effect, should not be further delayed.
