

MBJ Editor Honored by the Michigan Lawyers Auxiliary

By Audrey Nesbitt Gray

For many years Nancy Brown has held the position of editor for the Michigan Bar Journal. During this time she has aided numerous auxiliary members with their articles for this column. Under her watchful eye, she has helped us to reach many people to teach them about the work we do. We receive letters from members around the state, and as far away as Texas, requesting further information on the subjects of our articles.

We have received responses from members with differing points-of-view, and many positive notes and letters on programs the auxiliary sponsors in support of school children. West Publishing Company has even requested permission to include our articles in their Westlaw database.

We write on a variety of topics to educate you of our mission "to create a better citizen awareness of the law; to serve the organized bar associations of the state of Michigan, and to support and assist local lawyers spouses' organizations."

Nancy Brown understands this mission and has helped us in getting our message out to the public. She has always taken the time to meet with individuals who are submitting articles to the Bar Journal for the first time. She has also taken time from her busy schedule to meet with our organization regarding various changes in publication procedures and to encourage us to submit our program information for the State Bar website.

For these reasons, and many more, the Michigan Lawyers Auxiliary Council recently extolled Nancy's virtues and presented her with a plaque and our grateful thanks and appreciation for all that she has done for the Auxiliary.

The plaque reads:

To Nancy F. Brown, Editor, Michigan Bar Journal

In recognition of exemplary service, assistance and support to the MLA we gratefully acknowledge your inspired and personalized efforts on our behalf in communicating our Mission to the members of the State Bar of Michigan. ♦
