Probate & Estate Planning Section

In re Estate of Max D. Eggleston holds that, regarding an incapacitated spouse, the right of election under MCLA 700.2202(5) may only be exercised by order of the court, after finding that exercise is necessary to provide adequate support for the legally incapacitated person during that person's life expectancy. The Probate Court found that the legally incapacitated, terminally ill surviving spouse did not need assets from his deceased spouse's estate, and could not exercise his right of election. ♦
